VITAFER.

The Greatest of the Tonic Foods.

VITAFER is the essence of finest British milk, sterilized—concentrated and granulated—combined with the Glycero-phosphate of Sodium, Calcium, and Magnesium.

Vitafér is rich in body-building and nerve-restoring elements, the milk constituents form flesh and muscle, whilst the Glycero-phosphate revitalizes the nerves and brain. This latter effect is due to Organic Phosphorus being present in the food in the particular form in which it occurs in the human body.

Vitafér is a genuine restorative, and not a mere transitory stimulant.

PERAMBULATOR TAX.

A German Hint for the English Chancellor.

A fresh source of national revenue is suggested by the action of the Berlin suburb of Spandau, where the authorities have decided to license perambulators to be pushed along the streets, at the rate of 1s. 6d. each. A similar tax in Britain would relieve Mr. Lloyd George of many financial anxieties, though it might not enhance his popularity. To some extent it might also relieve the congestion of pavement traffic, especially if those parents who were not inclined to take out a license were restricted to the use of side streets and byways when accompanying the baby on its strolling excursion. In the West End, and the populous suburbs it is very often difficult to get even a peep at a dapper or milliner's window owing to the collection of nurse-maids with "prams." Mary's afternoon walk with her baby usually consists in a window-gazing tour, in the course of which pedestrians' shins suffer considerably. The girl pushes the pram straight ahead, but her eyes are turned in the direction of the display of finery.

The Spandau authorities have doubtless been impelled to impose the tax by considerations for the comfort of pedestrians, but there is a financial side to the scheme which is not unimportant. In this little suburb of Berlin the revenue from the "pram" tax will bring in £550 a year. The parks of London alone would probably pay for their upkeep if the perambulators that use them were taxed on the German scale.

DEPACING COINS.

Anarchists, who have been putting forth remarkable efforts to gain a foothold in England of late, states a correspondent, have now adopted a novel method of propaganda. This takes the form of stamping in relief on all coins passing through their hands the words: "Vive l'Anarchie." On specimens now in circulation in the East-end of London, Leeds, Edinburgh, and Liverpool the words are cut across the profile of the King. It is understood that the new departure is to be resorted to all over the world as a means of calling attention to the anarchist propaganda. As a rule the ordinary shopkeeper does not notice the defaced coinage until it is too late, but in some cases traders have refused to accept coins thus defaced as legal tender. This strange method of propaganda has been brought to the notice of militant suffragettes, who have expressed themselves as favourable to its adoption for their own purposes.

LAWYER'S WILL NOT IN ORDER.

Another lawyer who failed to leave his will in strict legal order was the late Mr. William Henry Sutcliffe, of the firm of Messrs. Sutcliffe and Co., of Hadden Bridge, who left estate of the gross value of £252,223. Before probate was granted an affidavit was required concerning alterations in the will.

The duties on the property will amount to about £42,000.

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN

It may be impossible to prevent accidents, but it is not impossible to be prepared for them. Chamberlain's Pain Balm is not beyond anyone's power, and with a little of this St. John's Wort preparation for such emergencies, you will be all right. Chamberlain and Chamberlain.

THE KAISER.

His Influence in German Affairs.

Temperamental Paradox.

"The present year has been distinguished," says Professor Hermann Oncken (of Heidelberg), "by the celebration of the jubilee of the accession of William II., and the event has been welcomed by the German nation as a good opportunity for taking an account of the true import of the quarter-century during which the Emperor and the Empire have been so closely and continuously connected."

In the Quarterly Review, he gives an interesting description of the Kaiser's influence on the country's welfare, the following being an excerpt—
"From the moment when William II. needed no longer to share his authority with the man whose genius had created it, he was able to carry out unimpeded his personal conceptions of the vocation of a king. The new spirit in his administration, which ever since that time has been steadily forced upon German and non-German—to concern themselves with the personality of the Emperor, appeared at first both startling and defiant."

PLACE IN THE CONSTITUTION.

In foreign countries, especially wrong ideas began to be formed as to political conditions in Germany. Because the conduct of the Emperor did not correspond with the position of a ruler under a parliamentary constitution, people fancied that the Germans were living under an absolutist system, not the removed, from Russian autocracy, however, unfriendly criticism of this nature had a weakness for clothing itself in the garb of a superior-minded goal for freedom. And it cannot be denied that some manifestations of the Emperor's own feelings, certain traits of Imperial majesty, have not seldom encouraged these ideas. As a matter of fact, Germany can exhibit institutions far more democratic, and far more individual freedom, than is commonly believed abroad.

"For instance, the sovereign power of the Emperor is controlled by a double system of checks; in the first place—he might be expected from the historical development of the Empire—by the federal nature of the constitution, which excludes a pure parliamentarism; and secondly, by the duplicated machinery of a Reichstag reporting on the broadest possible democratic electorate, and—so far as Prussia is concerned—of the Prussian Landtag with its two Houses. But the mere articles of the constitution do not exhaust the checks upon absolutism; account must also be taken of a long series of institutions, political and social, which determine the distribution of the social forces."

TAKING SIDES.

"And then we crown the edifice with the hereditary leadership of the Monarchy, with all the prestige of its historical traditions, with its independence of parties and classes—on hereditary dignity, it is true, but one to which the words of Goethe apply—
"The only he deserves both Life and Freedom."

Who day by day must struggle to be free. It is an office with lofty claims, but one that postulates a real personality behind it."

"It is in this spirit that the Emperor has sought to bring his own individuality into play. Even in foreign countries—if I may here borrow a few sentences from a speech of my own—he has made his mark that the expression 'the Kaiser' has almost become once more a title applied to him alone, as denoting a personality which, in all State gatherings of crowned heads, distinguishes him from the rest. And with this distinctive personality he has stepped out into the midst of his subjects, and put forth his whole strength in every decisive question of politics that has come before the country; he has taken part in every question that has stirred our intellectual life, not by the facile utterance of meaningless platitudes, but by taking sides, by confessions of faith, by leading, by backing, by challenging."

FOREIGNERS SURPRISED.

"It has often seemed as if, in the blood of this Hohenzollern, the material admissibility of the Coburg and Gotha dynasty of the Gault were confounding for mystery. On one side a conception of his duties as a monarch, directed by a religious and extremely personal sense of responsibility in which, however, a French writer saw only the expression of the incompressible 'mystique' Allemand; a strongly marked taste for all that has become historic, tradition, and 'chance'—for authority, tradition, and discipline of life; and a perfectionist, his Prussian words of military command."

NERVES WERE HIS TROUBLE

Rangoon Resident Says
Ordinary Medicines Wrought
No Improvement BUT "I
Have Enjoyed Splendid
Health Since My Cure By
Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

The most prevalent complaint in the East is Nervous Debility. The reason for which is clear. Through climatic causes the blood becomes thin and impoverished. Then the nerves fail to receive the nourishment they need, which only rich pure blood can give, and lameness, loss of appetite, irritability, dyspepsia, a general sense of weakness follow. Here is a case in point; one which forms an excellent object lesson, showing, as it does, cause, effect, and cure.

"Some years ago I never felt fit for the day's work," said Mr. P. D. FETTER, of the Rangoon Port Trust. "I was trembling and drowsy, lost desire for my meals, and week by week grew more irritable, languid and unhappy. Food set up awful pains in my chest and sides and I became quite unable to do my work. I felt more and more that I could hardly drag my legs along. My heart palpitated so violently that I had to rest every second step or so, and I would turn faint and reel with giddiness."

"Sharp pains frequently shot across my shoulders, and a weak sea-sickness in the back; at nights I had heavy sweats and often would be doubled up with stomach pains. Every morning there was a vile taste in my mouth, and the first meal of the day, however slight, had a nauseating effect. Bileous headaches crushed all life out of me. The doctors said I was suffering from Nervous Debility. Medicines wrought no improvement. I gradually became worse instead of better."

"Thus I went on, losing ground until a friend sent me a paper in which I read about a splendid cure of nervous debility by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I decided to give these pills a trial, and the result of a short treatment was that I felt more cheerful and able to get about my work. After I had taken a few bottles of this medicine I could eat, walk, and sleep well, and I felt stronger and more every day. I lost all trace of back weakness and my hair no longer fell out. I was able to do my work again."

"I continued taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills until I felt quite free from headaches and giddiness. Then I began to put on weight. Soon I was strong and well again, feeling more fit for hard work than I had done for years. I have enjoyed splendid health since my cure."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a proved remedy for all diseases due to impure blood and weak nerves such as Anæmia, Nervous Exhaustion, Indigestion, Malaria, Rheumatism, Skin Eruptions and the special ailments of ladies. Obtainable from medicine vendors everywhere, and from Dr. Williams' Medical Co., 88 Seachang Road, Shanghai, one bottle for $1.50, six for $8—post free.

BY GUM!

American chewing-gum, writes a correspondent, is derived from the sap of the chicle-gum or sapotilla pear-tree. Is not this identical with the husk-chicle tree of the Malay Peninsula? If so, it would be worthy of consideration to plant the trees, which are of very slow growth, on large areas, in view of a future demand for that delectable article, as palmed by the American public, from steelsman to school-boy, from aristocrat and factory girl to the wretchedest of the masses of FIVE Avenue and Madison Square. The fruit of the tree is highly appreciated by all nationalities, and commands a price equivalent to that of the mango and other esteemed fruits. The process of manufacturing the gum after tapping is very simple, and when the time arrived to place the commodity on the market, an expert could be brought over to initiate would-be manufacturers into proper methods. Dainty little sticks of the gum, sweetened during boiling and flavoured with lemon or vanilla, would appeal to the fairer sex; Asiatic ladies probably preferring theirs in rose and Arabian. A peppermint gum-drop would doubtless replace every masculine vegetable, so packed and sustaining would it prove; and as for the weary sickle, pulley, and after a few trials he would no more do without his gum-wish than without his robe. "Straits Times."

HATLOO.

Some of the finest cave treasures ever discovered have been found in the Hatloos caverns at Hatloos during the explorations which have been in progress for some time. The treasures consist of a large quantity of gold and silver coins, and a number of valuable manuscripts. The cave is situated in a mountain range in the Hatloos district, and is accessible only by a narrow path. The explorations were conducted by a party of men from the Hatloos district, and the treasures were discovered in a cave which had been known to exist for many years, but had never been explored before.
